Senate Budget Plan Favors the Wealthy, Hurts Working Families

Today, July 1, 2025, the U.S. Senate passed a devastating budget bill that places a heavy burden on working people and their communities. Here's what it means for USW members and why we're standing against it:

- The budget slashes critical Medicaid funding, putting health care services and jobs at risk, both for our members who work in health care and for those whose families and communities depend on these services. These cuts will mean fewer jobs, worse care, and entire communities left without essential health services.
- The budget walks back critical parts of the Inflation Reduction Act – gutting tax credits and grant funding that would have supported advanced manufacturing and reshoring jobs. USW locals poised to benefit from clean energy and industrial investments, in steel, aluminum, battery components, and more, now face an uncertain future.
- The budget includes some small, temporary tax relief for working people, like making overtime pay tax-free. But these provisions are short-lived and minor compared to the large, permanent tax breaks given to corporations and the wealthy.
